Since your Retina has a leaf shutter and the Sunpak is a small battery powered flash that probably has a short flash duration, especially on auto settings at close distances, 1/500 should work just fine. If you want to mix ambient light with the flash then slower shutter speeds will allow that, depending on how much ambient light there is.

Adjusting the flash compensation shows a huge improvement in the flash output, putting to shame the built in flash. Where the Sunpak shines is when you use its bounce flash capability in a room with a light colored ceiling. The results are simply amazing. The flash is quite compact and light so it is fairly easy to take along with the camera.
